Select Board Corner

Three years ago the State fined the Town of Leyden $3,700.00 for a late elevator inspection at Town Hall. We challenged that inspection report because we were not given the customary 60-day prior notice that the inspection was due. Bob Hardesty has been back and forth to Boston three times to meet with the Public Safety Board. Thanks to Bob's efforts the state finally refunded the $3,700.00.

We're pleased to see that Town Hall is being used more and more for the community. Meals, COA functions, classes and private parties are now a regular thing. Recently Emily Herron-Clark organized a great dinner put on by the Leyden Methodist Church. This truly benefits our community along with the organizations that use the building. Nick Adamski recently stripped and waxed the kitchen floor. Thank you, Nick. If you're interested in using the kitchen and dining or meeting hall for your event, just call Bob Hardesty at Town

Spring! It's time to think about gardening, and you may need some fresh ideas! If that's the case, stop in and browse through the materials we have on the shelves and/or place an ILL request for a special title.

Winter was pretty tame this year, so the hope is that we've saved a little money on fuel. Lacking insulation, this building can become cold quickly, but our new energy-efficient furnace, replaced two years ago, is doing a great job.

This spring/summer we hope to paint the north and east sides of the library. Signs of peeling are appearing, and we want to keep the RML as pristine as possible. I'll scrub the dust, dirt, and grime off the front of the building in May, plant our flowers, and welcome warm weather joyfully!

In late February I worked with fifth and sixth graders on the book they are reading as a class due to the grant I wrote last fall. On March 23, author, M. C. Barker, spent an entire morning with students discussing her methods of research, her writing strategies, and the characters, plot and theme of A Difficult Boy. After lunch students became the writers using the strategies they've learned from teacher, Lisa Armstrong, and the author. Our library/school connection is really valuable and acts as a useful catalyst for students to become thinking readers.

Don't forget to visit RML—everything is free!
Happy spring!

—Chris Johnston

Select Board Corner

Hall so he can reserve your time.

The Select Board recently met with Greenfield Mayor Bill Martin over a number of common topics that could benefit both our towns. Discussions involved how both towns could work together to form an internet network. Greenfield would also like us to join into their electrical aggregate program where electrical rates would be secured over a longer time to lessen the spike of current electrical bills due to higher demand during peak times. Public Safety was also discussed regarding 911 calls through Shelburne Control. Greenfield is setting up its own dispatch center that could serve other communities as well. These were all interesting topics that could make for better services and savings for both towns.

Leyden is applying with Northfield, Warwick and Heath to the Massachusetts Clean Energy Center for the aggregation of multiple small-scale solar PV installations for homeowners. The program will make it more affordable for the homeowner to purchase solar power installations. Goals of the program would increase education and awareness of solar PV, reduce costs associated with solar PV and increase local adoption of solar PV.

Leyden is readily working towards getting our new web site up and running in the next few weeks. Information will be more available and kept updated to keep the community better informed on everything that is going on in Leyden.

—Respectfully yours, Bill, Jeff, and Lance

WiredWest

I wish there were some way to describe to you the kind of activity that is taking place within the various committees of Wired West. Despite the fact that Governor Baker has put a temporary hold on dispensing the funds designated for broadband to western Massachusetts, and despite the fact that the leadership at MBI is in transition, WiredWest continues to work in every way possible to be sure that our towns are positioned to move ahead when those factors change. If anything, all of this has served to galvanize our end of the project. We have teams negotiating with MBI, working on all the technical and financial issues in ever more minute detail, helping our towns sort out the issues that are holding some of us back.

Our delegates and our broadband committees are looking at all kinds of suggestions that are popping up as the towns try to deal with yet more delays. All of us are frustrated that we are not seeing progress, so it is understandable that there would be some scrambling to put together something that they think might work faster. I can assure you that Leyden is being very well represented at every meeting, with Al Woodhull for WW, Jeff Neipp representing the Select Board, and Bob Ryan and others from the Broadband Committee attending meetings and presentations of each possibility. When this is done, we hope there will be no doubt that we have come to the best solution for Leyden.

So far, all the plans seem to just prove that WiredWest is by far the best vetted, best studied, most thought-out plan we have. vSeven years of hard work have produced a plan that still provides the best option for all our towns if we are serious about bringing the best broadband to all our residents at the best price possible. It is clear that the estimates for time and money for us all to be connected can't be improved upon. We know that these delays are frustrating and that many of you wonder if this will ever happen. It will happen. It has to happen if western Mass. is to survive as a viable part of the state. Unfortunately, there are no shortcuts. This is a massive, complicated project, but one that is drawing our region together in new ways. We are really shaping the future of this part of the state for generations to come.

—Sheila Hourihan and Albert S. Woodhull

Broadband Committee

Over the course of the last month, the Committee has had a series of meetings with several other towns in our ongoing exploration of possible broadband options beyond WiredWest.

Early in March, we visited Leverett and met with the Chair of the Selectboard, the MLP Chair and Town Administrator. They chose not to wait for the state (MBI) and built their network themselves without any assurance of state grant monies. They have been up and running for nine months and have high speed broadband connected to all but five of the approximately 800 homes in Leverett. We talked at length about how they went about building their own network and the problems they encountered.

We were surprised to read in the Recorder that Leyden was exploring the possibility of joining with Colrain, Wendell, New Salem and Shutesbury in a standalone five-town cooperative network. This concept was apparently floated by Wendell. We met with their broadband committee and later with representatives from the other towns to listen further to Wendell's arguments for such a cooperative. We have since notified Wendell that we see no value in Leyden joining the cooperative they are proposing.

Finally, two members of the Selectboard and myself met for the second time with Greenfield's Mayor Martin to continue exploring the possibility of building out our own network, but having Greenfield's MLP (Municipal Light Plant) service it, i.e., providing internet service and repairing lines, poles, etc.

As we continue our review of the various alternatives available to Leyden, the state continues to freeze the distribution of any of the $40 million of grant monies to unserved towns. The Baker-Polito Administration is committed to continuing its own review "to better understand the broadband expansion strategies being proposed." We hope that this will ultimately be to our benefit.—Bob Ryan, Chair, Leyden Broadband Committee

Protect Your Backyard Flock From Avian Flu

In 2015, highly pathogenic avian influenza (HPAI) struck the American Midwest and devastated the poultry industry. HPAI is not in Massachusetts now, but wild birds like ducks and geese could bring it here during their migratory travels. Although HPAI is a threat to all domestic poultry, no human transmission has occurred in the U.S.

Simple Steps to Keep Your Birds Safe

Backyard chicken owners can help to prevent HPAI from harming their birds by using safety practices the USDA calls “biosecurity.”

- 1) Keep your poultry out of contact with wild birds – especially ducks and geese - and the places they visit.
- 2) Do not share equipment with other backyard flock owners.
- 3) Do not expose your poultry to footwear or tires that have visited the home of another backyard flock.
- 4) Isolate new birds from your flock for 30 days.
- 5) Limit the number of people who visit your flock.

Battery Recycling and Proper Disposal

Free battery and cell phone recycling is available at all transfer stations within Franklin County Solid Waste District. Hand batteries and cell phones to the transfer station attendant for separate processing; never place in recycling dumpsters!

There are many different types of batteries and some contain mercury and other heavy metals. Batteries can release mercury, cadmium or other heavy metals into the air and water, ultimately entering the food chain and posing health threats to people and the environment. Please read below for disposal instructions for specific battery types.

Rechargeable batteries are found in those electronics and appliances that can be recharged, such as cell phones; cordless phones; ipads/tablets; laptops; power tools; Roomba vacuum cleaners, some toys; kids ride-on toys; baby monitors; some digital cameras; and rechargeable toothbrushes, razors, flashlights, and handheld vacuum cleaners. In addition, rechargeable batteries that can be recharged with a battery recharger should also be recycled when they can no longer hold a charge. Rechargeable batteries and cell phones contain heavy metals and should never be thrown away; they should always be recycled. Hand rechargeable batteries to your transfer station attendant. Cell phones should also be recycled in this manner.

The specific batteries accepted are: Nickel-cadmium (Ni-cad), Nickel Metal Hydride (Ni-MH), Nickel Zinc (Ni-Zn), Lithium Ion batteries (Li-ion), and Small Sealed Lead (Pb). These abbreviations are printed on rechargeable batteries.

"Call 2 Recycle" boxes for free rechargeable battery recycling are available at Home Depot, Lowe's and Radio Shack. Rechargeable batteries can also be taken to Household Hazardous Waste Collections.

Alkaline batteries are the most common household batteries. They are available in many sizes and shapes such as AA, C, D and 9 volt. Alkaline batteries manufactured since 1996 do not contain mercury or other hazardous materials. Alkaline batteries are safe to throw in the trash, but tape the contacts on 9-volts before storage or disposal. All batteries should be checked carefully before disposal, as some rechargeable and lithium batteries resemble alkalines.

If you would like to reduce the number of alkaline batteries you are using, consider purchasing an inexpensive battery charger and some compatible rechargeable batteries. These batteries can be recharged over and over again, but remember to recycle them (as above) when they cannot be charged anymore.

Carbon Zinc and Zinc Chloride batteries may be disposed of in the same manner as alkaline batteries; see above.

Lithium batteries are used many applications but most often in cameras. The word "lithium" is printed on the battery. Be sure to check all batteries; some lithium batteries, such as the AA size or the short and fat lithium batteries used in cameras, resemble alkaline batteries, but should be recycled by handing them to your transfer station attendant. Lithium batteries can also be taken to Household Hazardous Waste Collections.

Button batteries are the small round silver batteries found in watches, calculators, hearing aids, toys, remote car locks, flameless "flicker candles," electric fence dog collars, singing greeting cards and singing balloons. Many button batteries contain mercury; therefore, button batteries must be disposed of properly: hand to your transfer station attendant. Button batteries can also be taken to Household Hazardous Waste Collections.

Lead Acid batteries from cars, trucks, kids ride-on toys, etc. must be recycled by law. Recycling programs, some for cash or credit back, are available at auto supply stores, local scrap metal recyclers, and at some transfer stations. Lead acid batteries are also accepted at household hazardous waste collections.
